U.S. actor Kevin Spacey has been acquitted of charges of sexually assaulting several men in the London criminal trial. After more than twelve hours of deliberations, the jury found Spacey not guilty on all charges, the jury announced. KEVIN SPACEY: More on Me Too MeToo - The most important thing from Z+: Kevin Spacey, the accused MeToo: Harvey's Shame Abuse in the film industry: Better to shut up Spacey, who turned 64 this Wednesday, thanked the jury after the verdict was announced. He now has to process what happened, the actor said, but is enormously grateful to the jury for taking the time to carefully consider all the evidence before coming to a decision. "And I'm humbled by the outcome today," he said. Had Spacey been found guilty, he would have faced jail time. Prosecutors had accused the two-time Oscar winner of twelve counts of sexual assault, some of them serious, against four men. The accusations range from harassment to coercion for sexual intercourse. In several cases, Spacey allegedly grabbed the men's crotches, and in one case oral sex was involved. The assaults allegedly occurred between 2001 and 2013 in London and the county of Gloucestershire. Spacey was artistic director at London's renowned Old Vic theater from 2004 to 2015. Prosecution called Spacey a "sexual bully" In the trial at Southwark Crown Court, which lasted about four weeks, the prosecution had called the Oscar winner a "sexual bully" who exploited his power. Spacey denied the allegations, or stated that it had been consensual sex. The twelve jurors found him not guilty on all charges on Wednesday after three days of deliberations. The previously successful actor's career was abruptly interrupted by allegations raised in the wake of the #MeToo debate. Netflix ended its collaboration on House of Cards and sued Spacey for damages after complaints about him surfaced from on-set employees. The Old Vic theater also distanced itself. Scenes featuring Spacey in the thriller All The Money in the World were subsequently removed. Even before the trial began in London, Spacey had expressed the hope that he would be able to resume his successes if acquitted.
